INTRODUCTION

A booklet by the present author, The South Asian collections of the Wellcome Institute for the History of Medicine (London: W.I.H.M., 1984), gives a description of the provenance and character of the Wellcome Indic collections in general, and is available from the Institute. This booklet mentions the more important or striking manuscripts in the collection, and illustrates several of them in colour. Also described are the finding aids giving access to the manuscripts, but a résumé of these is given here for convenience.¹ The remaining remarks are intended to explain only the present handlist.

PREVIOUS WORK ON THE COLLECTION

Dr Paira Mall, who originally assembled the collection of manuscripts in South Asia between 1911 and 1921, apparently did no work of cataloguing. Many of the newspapers in which the manuscripts were wrapped bore notes which might have been by him, but it is more likely that these were by his assistant, Rāmacandra Śarman, who also made some lists of manuscripts. However, Mall kept careful financial accounts of each purchase he made, and a study of his accounts together with his lengthy correspondence during the period of his buying will throw much interesting light on the conditions of acquisition and the provenance of the collection.

In 1954 Professor V. Raghavan of Madras University visited the Wellcome Institute and in the course of a few months (September - November) prepared a rough handlist of about 3000 titles.

Another finding aid, which gives more information on each manuscript and includes many extracts, incipits and explicits, is being prepared by Professor D. Pingree of Brown University, who began intermittent work on the collection in 1971. This draft catalogue covers in more detail the jyotiṣa manuscripts mentioned in Raghavan's list, but many non-jyotiṣa works have also been described. About one thousand titles have been described to date, and this work forms a natural basis for a future volume of the descriptive catalogue on astral and mathematical manuscripts.

Since 1982 a handlist of the whole collection has been in preparation by the present author.² Volume one of this project is here presented. Work on this handlist began with the examination of those manuscripts not seen by Professor Raghavan, and to date upwards of 2300 manuscripts have been listed on cards, which are in course of being transferred into the present format. The handlist is to be viewed as an intermediate step towards the writing of a descriptive catalogue of the collection.

Between them, these three finding aids now give access to about three-quarters of the collection, though in varying degrees of detail.

THE PRESENT HANDLIST

The first volume of this handlist describes 1003 manuscripts. It is arranged in subject groupings, and within these by alphabetical order of title, then author, and finally in order of date, with undated manuscripts preceding dated ones. Indexes of authors, titles, dated and illustrated manuscripts, places of copying, scribes, owners, scripts, languages, added subjects, and shelf numbers are subjoined. Roman alphabetical order is used throughout as an unavoidable consequence of automated sorting.

The details recorded for each manuscript are such as can be discovered in a relatively limited period of time. These include, where possible, title, author, foliation, scribe, place of copying, former ownership, language (Sanskrit, Prākṛit, Hindī (in īkās), etc.), script and subject. In almost all cases, further study of the manuscripts will reveal new facts. Extracts and brief analyses of the contents are given where these are necessary for the identification of a work. References to Aufrecht's Catalogus Catalogorum (CC), Raghavan's New Catalogus Catalogorum (NCC), Pingree's Census of the Exact Sciences in Sanskrit (CESS), the History of Indian Literature (HIL) edited by Gonda, and other standard reference works are given where appropriate. References to other catalogues of manuscripts are made by way of reference to K.L. Janert's Annotated bibliography of the catalogues of Indic manuscripts (ABC).³

Only rudimentary descriptions are given for many of the palm-leaf manuscripts, since their present fragile condition proscribes extensive handling. The shelf numbers of these and other manuscripts awaiting conservation are preceded in the list by an asterisk (*): the librarian on duty should be consulted as to whether such manuscripts may be seen. In some cases, exceptionally fragile manuscripts have been microfilmed and readers may be asked to use the microfilm rather than the original.

Please note that the serial numbers assigned to the manuscripts are for the sole purpose of reference from the indexes, and are specific to this handlist only. They have no relation to any library numbers. Readers wishing to order or refer to a manuscript should use its shelf number.

As far as is practicable, information has been recorded in accordance with the conventions of the second edition of the Anglo-American Cataloguing Rules (AACR2), with Hensen's amplification of the fourth chapter (APPAM). Users of the list are referred to the AACR2 manual for details of conventions. To AACR2's use of square brackets in the context of textual corruptions, I have added the use of underlining in the extracts to indicate unclear letters or uncertain transcriptions.

It is proposed that a further five volumes similar to this one will be issued over the next few years. This will give a fair degree of preliminary bibliographic control of the collection. Thereafter the work of full descriptive cataloguing can begin.

I would appeal to all users of this handlist to notify me of any corrections or additional information they may have to offer regarding its entries, and in particular of any of their publications which mention or use Wellcome manuscripts. Any such communications will be gratefully received and acknowledged in subsequent volumes.⁴

NOTES

1. An artistically important manuscript which has come to light since the booklet was published is the Bilvamaṅgalastava that appears in this handlist as serial no. 514.

2. When I first began work on the Wellcome Sanskrit collection, I did not know how large a task it would be. I began by writing full descriptive articles on manuscripts selected more or less randomly from the crowded shelves of the Wellcome Institute's Oriental Room. However, I soon learned that there was an equal if not greater number of manuscripts in a basement storeroom, and further caches in scattered locations around the building. It also appeared that the collection had been considerably disturbed since 1954 when Raghavan wrote his handlist. Many manuscripts in his list could no longer be located on the shelves, and there were large groups of manuscripts which Raghavan appears never to have seen. Many bundles of manuscripts had no shelf numbers. Furthermore, some of the apparently incomplete manuscripts subsequently proved to have simply become separated into parts which had then been shelved at different locations. This was all in spite of the valiant efforts of the library staff to bring order to the collection.

It thus became clear to me that a different approach was necessary. A campaign was planned on two fronts: to unite the manuscripts in a single physical location, and to make a preliminary survey of the whole collection as rapidly as possible. The most important aspects of the latter task would be first to assign a unique shelf number to each item, secondly to record enough information so that when the survey was over it would be possible to reunite parts of manuscripts which had been separated, and thirdly to identify items from Raghavan's list which had been lost on the shelves. Descriptive cataloguing could begin only when the manuscripts had been brought to order in this way.

To a great extent, this campaign is proving successful. The paper manuscripts are now united in an air-conditioned, flood-proof basement stack. The palm-leaf manuscripts, originally distributed indiscriminately throughout the collection in unsuitable conditions, are now united in one location, albeit in a different room, and are properly wrapped and stored. To avoid any confusion between the shelf numbers assigned by myself and any of the earlier fragmented systems of numbering, I have used the letters of the Greek alphabet to distinguish the new shelf sequences. The rationale behind these letters is as follows: alpha, beta and gamma are sequences of paper manuscripts in ascending order of size; delta is a sequence of outsize or irregularly shaped manuscripts; epsilon is the sequence of palm-leaf manuscripts.

Most of the manuscripts were originally wrapped in First World War Indian newspapers, interesting in themselves, but bad for the manuscripts due to their acidity. Having ascertained from the British Library Newspaper Library that these newspaper titles are not unique, I now systematically discard them and replace them with acid-free Japanese tissue. All manuscripts in the Greek-letter sequence are wrapped in this material as they are catalogued, and then stored in archival envelopes in archival storage boxes. This will at least halt their deterioration while the Wellcome conservation team grapples with the lengthy task of repairing and restoring the many damaged manuscripts. A conservation programme for the whole collection has now been set in motion, and several manuscripts have already received expert care.

Any manuscript with a Greek-letter shelf number is now stored in proper conditions and can be positively located. This may sound a small victory, but anyone who has tried to organise a collection of this size and complexity will understand the real sense of achievement it engenders.

3. This is not an ideal method, since one cannot depend on everyone having Janert's work, but it was felt to be an economical way of minimising the bibliographical complexity of what is, after all, a preliminary work.

4. The text of this handlist was prepared on an IBM Displaywriter using the licensed programs Reportpack and Textpack 6. It was printed out, with all diacritical marks, on an IBM 5218 printer with a modified 086 049 daisy-wheel for the main text, and a standard symbol 086 201 print-wheel adding the Greek characters in a second pass, using the equation print task.

The 18 miniatures are as follow:

leaves 1v and 2r: Five Jinas and Prajñāpāramitā leaf 101v: events in Nalagiri, Śrāvastī, the 33 heaven;

leaf 102r: Buddha's birth, temptation, turning of the dharmacakra;

leaf 208v: monkey episode, Buddha in dhyāna, in nirvāṇa;

leaf 208r: Tārā, Buddha in dhyāna being poked in the ears, Avalokiteśvara.

The paintings are in a simple style, using red, yellow and green colours mainly, with black and white details. Last leaf appears unfinished. Margins on the illustrated leaves are yellow with simple decorative details and red frames, which also frame the paintings. There are roundels on leaves 39r, 56v, (76v), 81v(col.), 84v, 93v(col.), 112r, 114v, 118r, (136r), 140r, 146r, 152v, 157r, 162r, 164r, 167r, 170v, 174v, 179r, 186v, 188v, 200v, (206r), 206v. There are flourishes on the numeral 3 in the leaf numbering, left recto of each 10th leaf. The boards, which are also illustrated, are later Nepalese and slightly damaged.
